PROGRAM:

Greg and Trish Meeker reflect on the Juvenile Justice System. He discusses the need for orderly adult protection and supervision. He describes Hyperlexis (too much legal process) and gives some disturbing examples. He fears that we are leaning toward the extreme of "too much law". He wants to find a middle ground between anarchy and legal "overkill". He and Trish know that teenagers have a tough time growing up and things happen. They hope that adults will be there to shepherd young people through the gauntlet of their mistakes. Officers and prosecutors need reach outcomes that are right for society and for the children who have come into the system. Trish will come back another time to talk to us about substance abuse in the middle and upper classes
