Rotary Welcomes Appalachian Voices' Austin Hill

Today's guest speaker is Austin Hill, the lead field representative for Appalachian Voices' outreach and organizing efforts in the state and across the country. Hill assists with coordinating efforts in educating Congress and regional state legislatures about Appalachian Voices' issues. Growing up in the mountains of western North Carolina, Austin's love for the mountains inspires and fuels his grassroots organizing and outreach work at Appalachian Voices

Appalachian Voices is an award-winning, environmental non-profit committed to protecting the land, air and water of the central and southern Appalachian region. Since the impacts of coal threaten Appalachia more than any other single source of pollution, Appalachian Voices is committed to reducing coal's impact on the region and advancing its vision for a cleaner energy future.

Founded in 1997, Appalachian Voices is headquartered in Boone, N.C. with offices in Charlottesville, Va. and Washington, D.C. Appalachian Voices believes in working in concert with others produces maximum results, and are proud members of the Alliance for Appalachia, Waterkeeper Alliance, Wise Energy for Virginia, and Repowering NC coalitions.

They were also awarded a 2010 BENNY Award by the Business Ethics Network for our role as a supporting organization in Rainforest Action Network's Global Finance Campaign. E, the Environmental Magazine recently listed Appalachian Voices as one of their top five favorite ways to become environmentally active.
