Jacqueline Marcell

JACQUELINE MARCELL was so compelled by a year as the sole caregiver to her challenging elderly father and sweet but ailing mother (both with early Alzheimer's not properly diagnosed for over a year), that once she figured everything out, she gave up her stalled career as a television executive to become an advocate for eldercare awareness and reform.

Determination to save others from a similar experience resulted in her first (best-selling) book "Elder Rage"; launching the "Coping With Caregiving" radio show; media including: TODAY, CNN, PBS Documentary, "Woman's Day," "Prevention," "AARP Bulletin" cover story; a syndicated column and three blogs; and over 150 keynotes--including to the National Security Agency and Florida House of Representatives. Mixing practical advice with humor, Jacqueline teaches: the early warning signs, stages and treatments for Alzheimer's; prevention guidelines and preparing for our own later years; creative behavioral techniques to manage challenging elders; the value of Adult Day Care. Jacqueline delivers real hope that there can still be a good life after a diagnosis of dementia, if it is properly managed medically and behaviorally.

- June 25, 2008 Gender, War, and Peace
Can we put an end to war? Yes, according to behavioral biologist Judith Hand. Dr. Hand is the author of "Woman, Power, and the Biology of Peace" and the founder of A World Without War. She will discuss the connections among biology, biochemistry, and aggression.
- Arline Curtiss, who spoke to our group in April, has said about Dr. Hand's work: "Everybody speculates, in general, philosophically, if Homo sapiens will ever be free from war. This is the first time anybody has actually figured out, specifically, biologically, how we might avoid it in the future."
- Dr. Hand earned her Ph.D. in biology from UCLA. An evolutionary biologist, her areas of specialization include animal behavior, ornithology, and primatology. After completing a Smithsonian Post-doctoral Fellowship at the National Zoo in Washington, D.C., she returned to UCLA as a research associate and lecturer. She is a member of a number of professional organizations among them the International Society for Human Ethology (ISHE), the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS), the American Ornithologists Union (AOU), and San Diego Professional Writers (SDPW).

Earthquake risks in developing countries

Brian Tucker of GeoHazards Int'l will tell us about steps that can be taken to minimize the damages from earthquakes before they happen.

Brian writes: The earthquake risk in developing countries is large and growing rapidly. Unless something is done to reduce it, developing countries will suffer human and economic losses far greater than these countries have experienced in the past. Given the "shrinking" of the world, these losses will affect developed countries as well. GeoHazards International (GHI) is a Palo Alto-based, nonprofit organization that has attempted to reduce the death and suffering caused by earthquakes in the world's most vulnerable communities, through advocacy, preparedness, and mitigation. Disaster response, recovery and reconstruction, which attract so much attention and resources after earthquakes strike, are not the work of GHI. Instead, GHI works before earthquakes to raise awareness, strengthen local institutions, and launch various mitigation activities, particularly in schools and hospitals. This is how to reduce death, suffering and economic losses. GHI and its partners around the world have achieved some success: because of our work, thousands of school children are safer, hundreds of cities are now aware of their risk, the seismic hazard of dozens of cities have been assessed, and numerous local organizations are more capable to manage their communities' earthquake risk. But there is disturbing evidence that the rate at which earthquake risk management is improving, globally, is woefully inadequate. As GHI continues its work to improve risk management in developing countries, it has launched an effort to recruit new allies, such as the Rotary Clubs, for ideas and support.

When Baseball Went to War

Sports historian Bill Swank returns!

In November 2007, local baseball historian and author Bill Swank was one of the moderators for the "When Baseball Went To War" conference at the National World War II Museum in New Orleans, Louisiana. He will discuss "Baseball and the Battlefield," "Baseball and Civil Rights" and "Major League Baseball During WWII" at our meeting. Swank contributed material to a book named for the conference, "When Baseball Went To War," which will be published by Triumph Books in conjunction with the WWII Museum and the Baseball Hall of Fame. It will be available for purchase in October 2008 prior to the World Series.

Marooned With Very Little Beer on an Island in the Sea of Cortez

Intrepid explorer, Graham Mackintosh, will show and tell us about his latest adventure on an remote island in the Sea of Cortez.

Mackintosh is one of Baja California's most unusual explorers. He has walked its entire shoreline and traveled from mission to mission accompanied only by a burro.

Today, he'll tell us about his latest book, "Marooned with Very Little Beer." Being marooned probably didn't ruffle him nearly so much as being without the beer.

Be prepared to meet a very interesting person with a very interesting true story.

The early days of Arabian Oil

The world was forever changed when American geologists and engineers in the 1930s and 1940s discovered oil in Saudi Arabia and developed the Middle Eastern oil industry.

Tim Barger, the publisher of "Discovery! The Search for Arabian Oil" will discuss the birth of the Saudi oil industry and its implications that continue to resonate to this day.

In 1955, Aramco (the Arabian American Oil Company) commissioned Wallace Stegner to write a narrative account of the creation and development of the oil industry in Saudi Arabia. The manuscript was shelved until 1967, when it was unearthed and published in 14 installments of "Aramco World." An abridged version was published in Lebanon in 1971, but it remained unpublished in the United States until September 2007.

In "Discovery! The Search for Arabian Oil," Stegner chronicled the construction of the first wells, the political and corporate tussles, and the collaboration across cultures. It's a tale that includes Saudi princes, American geologists, mechanics, desert guides, British nobility and a cast of colorful characters.

Stegner (1909-1993), who won the Pulitzer Prize in 1972 for "Angle of Repose," was the author of more than 30 books. He was a writing professor at Stanford University when Aramco hired him to write the narrative account of the oil venture's early days.

GSE presentation

Our Group Study Exchange team comprising of 5 teachers from San Diego County and one Rotarian has returned from their trip to South India. The Team Leader, Larry Sundram will share their experiences with the club on March 12th.

Group Study Exchange (GSE) program is a unique cultural and vocational exchange opportunity for teachers in the early years of their professional life. It is designed to develop professional and leadership skills so that they can address the needs of their communities and an increasingly global workplace.

GSE participants follow an extensive and rigorous program of international travel and team activities.

Vocational visits

- Provide opportunities to observe vocations as practiced in another country
- Impact team members' long-term careers through participation in an organized program of study, discussion, and reciprocal exchange of ideas in their respective fields

Cultural experiences

- Allow participants to study another country and its people, language, and institutions through experiences in an organized and meaningful host program
- Promote an appreciation of cultural diversity worldwide

Fellowship opportunities

- Encourage team members and hosts to meet, communicate, and live with each other in a spirit of fellowship and goodwill
- Consider each other's problems, aspirations, and community concerns
- Foster lasting friendships and international understanding
