Serving the Country for Over 20 Years

Over the last decade, the roles of rural nurses have broadened from bedside care to more autonomous roles within rural centres. The rural nurse is now addressing health problems more proactively, rather than being reactive. The role of rural nurses are now more focused on preventive health care which brings about a change in the way of thinking that is moving rural health care professionals towards primary health care providers. Now, rural nurses are no longer only providing health care, but promoting health and wellbeing to the community.

The demand for qualified nurses is growing, and the focus on new training models means that many rural nurses are now delivering care in new and innovative ways to meet the needs of their communities.

Fact File:
- People living in remote areas had higher rates of hospitalization than those living in major cities
- Nurses are the single largest group of all health workers
- Rural and remote nurses need more training and professional development opportunities
