LEARNING THE TRUTH

During 2021, Canadians have been shocked by the ongoing discovery of over 1,300 unmarked graves of children buried on the grounds of former Residential Schools in Canada. This number is sadly expected to rise as additional sites are surveyed. The grief felt by Indigenous Peoples is beyond measure.

This tragic news has triggered a national reckoning over Canada's legacy of the Indian Residential School system that operated for over 100 years, from the 1870s to the 1990s. Government-funded, they were part of a policy attempting to assimilate Indigenous children into European culture by separating them (often forcefully) from their Indigenous languages and cultures, which also meant separating them from their families and communities, from age 4 to 16. Over time, approximately 150,000 Indigenous children attended the residential schools and around 6,000 of these children disappeared, often without any explanation to their families.

These discoveries have also brought the term Intergenerational Trauma into everyday discussions as we continue to understand the long-term effects of the Residential School System and how today's Indigenous People are still suffering the consequences.

With the recent discovery of these unmarked graves, Canadians are reconsidering their personal understanding of Canada's history and its relationship with Turtle Island's (North America's) original inhabitants. Canadians are asking for more information and how they can help with Truth and Reconciliation. Learning the Truth is step one.

These three films will be shown at various times.

- Doctrine of Discovery: Stolen Lands, Strong Hearts (2019)

This is a must-see film. It explains how the Doctrine, issued as a series of Papal Bulls originating in the 1400s, was used by European monarchies to provide a framework for explorers like Christopher Columbus to lay claim to lands that were vacant or occupied by non-Christians. The Doctrine claimed that Indigenous Peoples in the Americas could be considered non-human, allowing the land they lived on to be seen as “terra nullius” or uninhabited. The effects of the Doctrine are still felt today in modern-day laws and policies. This film can also be watched online here.

- Beans (2020)

This Canadian drama explores the 1990 Oka crisis when two Mohawk communities entered a 78-day armed stand-off with government forces to protect a burial ground from developers. Viewers of the film experience the crisis through the eyes of a young Mohawk girl, Tekehentakhwa, nicknamed “Beans.”

- The World Remembers When the World Broke Open (2019)

This film is about a chance encounter on the street between two Indigenous women. One is pregnant and the victim of domestic abuse, and the other can “pass as white” and is trying to help her. The film confronts the problem of domestic abuse, and how it is impacted by social class, ethnicity, and trauma. It also explores the precarious difficulties faced by those who dare to intervene in cycles of abuse. It is both challenging to watch, and a poetic, powerful cinematic experience.

TOWARDS TRUTH - FREE OFFER OF THE COMPELLING BOOK: TOWARDS BRAIDING

This is a must read for organizations and individuals who are looking to explore 'different ways of knowing and being' in order to deepen their understanding of DIVERSITY EQUITY & INCLUSION (DEI) from an Indigenous, lived experience perspective.

With the book's research and writing sponsored by the Musagetes Foundation, Towards Braiding does not provide a direct "how to" for achieving Indigenous DEI (nor do the authors necessarily subscribe to the frame of DEI) but it identifies common pitfalls to avoid, and the principles required that move towards having more sustainable and generative relationships with Indigenous people.

As a community service, the Rotary Club of Guelph's Indigenous Awareness Committee (with financial support from the City of Guelph) has printed 500 copies of this book for organizations and individuals wanting to learn more and help with DEI initiatives, especially with the Indigenous community.

Contact B. Holmes, rcog.iacomm@gmail.com to request a free copy, while quantities last.
