- ◆ The Woodstock Edition celebrating the 50 year Anniversary:

On August 15,16 and 17th, 1969, 50 years ago last Thursday more than 400,000 people learned about getting along together and setting priorities.

I am talking about the Woodstock Music Festival and it was billed as three days of music and peace.

The organizers planned for 150,000 people and were not prepared for almost three times that amount. There was first the miles of abandoned cars clogging up the access road, then the running out of medical supplies, then the running out of food and a very large rainstorm drenching the instant city.

Bands were flown in by helicopters to get over the traffic, the Governor of New York mobilized 45 Army Medical Doctors and supplies, and the people of surrounding towns donated all of their excess food.

The festival became a symbol of intelligence and humanity and cooperation and love and affection.

The organizers opened it up as a free concert as they had not had time to construct a perimeter fence. They believed in the young people and treated them as though inside each and every one of them was a loving decency and a fineness of spirit.

As a result, not one life was lost in what could have become a humanitarian disaster and instead, became a defining moment of a generation.
