The Sheriff, a retired meteorologist, was looking at world heat records. He was researching the highest average global temperature and was not surprised to see new world records. The values stated might seem low to you at first glance but remember half the world is in winter.

The Earth has just experienced its warmest day in recent history, according to the Copernicus Climate Change Service (C3S) data. On 22 July 2024, the daily global average temperature reached a new record high in the ERA5 dataset, at 17.16°C. This exceeds the previous records of 17.09°C, set just one day before on 21 July 2024 and 17.08°C, set a year earlier on 6 July 2023.*

For this information and the suggestion that climate change might be real, he only fined everyone $5 for their education.

Yesterday a friend gave me a plant and said that on the day it blooms, I'll meet my soulmate.
Today it was eaten by my cat. I'm done.

The trunk is unloaded and Art and Glenna look at the load.

I started jogging today.
I didn't want to, but the
