The struggle ends
When gratitude begins

The Sheriff this week was Peter Spek.

July 6 features several lighthearted, international-style fun days that are observed or recognized in Canada (as in many other places), but nothing exclusively Canadian or official like Canada Day (July 1). Here are the main ones:

- International Kissing Day (also called World Kissing Day): A playful day encouraging kisses with loved ones. It's widely listed and celebrated informally.
- National Fried Chicken Day: A foodie favorite—perfect for enjoying some crispy chicken (Canadian twists like poutine pairings could make it extra fun).
- Take Your Webmaster to Lunch Day: A quirky, niche one for appreciating the people who manage websites (tech teams or IT folks often get a nod).
- Others sometimes mentioned: Umbrella Cover Day, National Air Traffic Control Day, or Virtually Hug a Virtual Assistant Day.

These are mostly unofficial "fun holidays" promoted by sites like Holiday Insights, National Today, or TimeAndDate—not statutory or provincial holidays in Canada.

For context, Canada's big July events are around Canada Day (July 1) with fireworks, parades, and barbecues, plus things like the Calgary Stampede (early July) or Nunavut Day (July 9). No prominent silly or weird national day lands exactly on the 6th.

If you're planning something fun, International Kissing Day or Fried Chicken Day offer easy, humorous ways to celebrate—maybe combine them for a cheeky picnic! Let me know if you want ideas or details on any of these. 🤔🍗

Happy Sad

No happy sad this time.

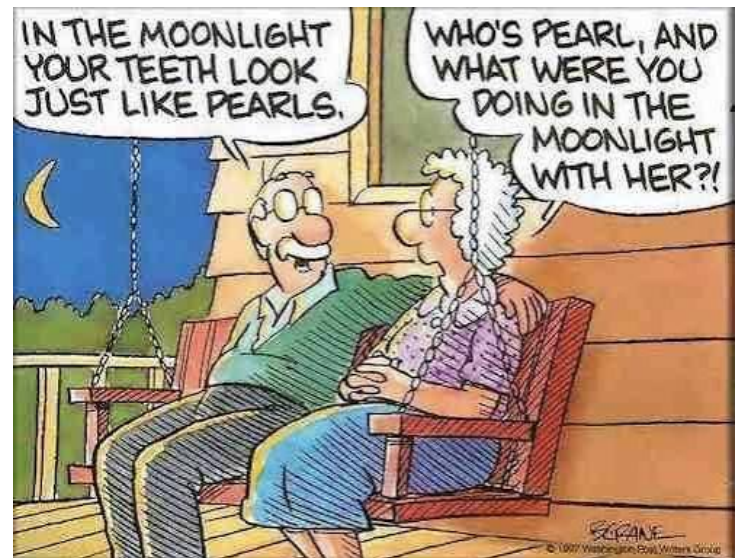

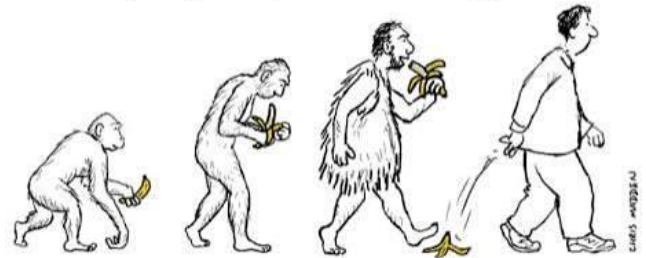

Business

No business discussed this time, and we enjoyed our meals with good company.

HUMOUR

THE EVOLUTION OF HUMOUR

"Your insurance provider reviewed your symptoms and wants me to treat you for indigestion."
