because he is happy.

The Oakbotics Team had a great presentation for us. They gave us a bit of the history of this international competition and of their club. Each member present talked about his contribution to the project and they explained how all clubs received their new instructions at the same time. After a slide presentation we were able to watch first hand this years robot in action. This definitely is a group effort with everyone participating. The team won a couple of awards this year and were quite pleased with their results. Doug thanked the team and presented them with a Polio Plus certificate of donation. They in turn presented Doug with a certificate of appreciation for having sponsored them for yet another year (10 possibly?)

Tom advised that he purchased a great craft kit from Costco (see photo with Vic holding it up) and suggested that if anyone else was doing some shopping they are a great idea for us to donate to Stevenson Camp.

Arun won the draw and graciously gave his bottle of vintage to guest Julie who promised to share it with hubby Colin.

Considered one of the most beautiful furs, wolverine is a highly prized pelt, selling for an average of $400 if in prime condition. Approximately 500 wolverine pelts are sold in Canada each year, over three-quarters of the coming from British Columbia. Nunavut, Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Wolverines are considered endangered in Quebec and Labrador, and "of special concern" in other areas west of Hudson Bay.
