GREENHOUSE PROJECT

SEATTLE ROTARIANS VISIT THE GREENHOUSE PROJECT IN OAXACA, MEXICO. READ FURTHER FOR SUSAN SOLA'S ARTICLE ABOUT THE VISIT.

Rotary Supports Mexican Subsistence Farm Families (by Susan Sola)

The Rotary Clubs of the University District in Seattle, Clinton, Iowa and Billings, Montana have collaborated with the Rotary Club of Bella Vista Atizapán outside Mexico City for several years to provide family greenhouses to help Mexican subsistence farm families in drought-stricken Oaxaca state stay together and avoid the men having to leave their families and migrate to find work. This powerful model project has grown and inspired others: initial results are very promising in Chapantongo, Hidalgo state, where there is more water but similar levels of rural unemployment, and the same clubs are supporting new larger, cooperative greenhouses run by 5-6 families each.

In January 2022, Mexican Rotarians Jesus Hernandez and Juana Aguilar hosted Seattle Rotarians Susan Sola and Paula Laschober on a visit to some of the 160+ rural families in the Huajuapan de Leon district who have received greenhouses. The farmers expressed their gratitude and positive experiences growing tomatoes, chilies, cilantro, green beans, onions, carrots, radishes, lettuce, zucchini, pumpkins and other crops to feed their families and bring in extra income. They also shared a delicious meal using some of these fresh, organic vegetables and proudly demonstrated their neat greenhouses full of beautiful, healthy vegetables in the middle of a dry, arid landscape.

It was inspiring to meet and talk to the enthusiastic women and men who have worked very hard to make successes of these greenhouses, which have made big changes in their lives. Families can now fill a large part of their nutritional needs and use any extra produce to barter, share, sell or use in micro-businesses such as tiny cafes, taquerias or food sales. Customers have even started to come directly to buy from them. Experiments are under way to raise nopal cactus and can it to sell, and to raise and roast peanuts, adding value to them in the form of candies and baked goods.

This project has inspired rural networking and collaboration, idea generation and incipient optimism among a population that has suffered from isolation and challenging geography, climate change, limited infrastructure and services and, most recently, higher unemployment and poverty exacerbated by the pandemic. Food from the greenhouses helped to support rural villages kept in quarantine for long periods during COVID. Victor Martinez, the local administrator and educator, and the Mexican Rotarians have made enormous efforts to sustain and keep the project moving forward during COVID and to communicate this progress to the U.S. Rotary partners via personal success stories and photos. We all celebrate when we see the picture of a woman harvesting her first, beautiful crop of tomatoes, a man generating other types of income by saving hours of farm work with greenhouse drip irrigation, or children working and learning together with their parents in their greenhouse.

Susan and Paula's trip confirmed and strengthened the ties between our clubs and our confidence in the project's management. Mexican Rotarian Claudio Cruz, the Oaxaca native who founded and led the project until his death from COVID last year, would be proud of our joint U.S.-Mexico collaboration and results to date. He would be cheering us on as we look toward the next chapter in helping to meet the many needs of these very deserving people.

Drip irrigation conserves scarce water and helps produce several crops per year. Victor Martinez examines peanut crop.
