North Scott Rotary Rallies for Youth Our Annual Auction

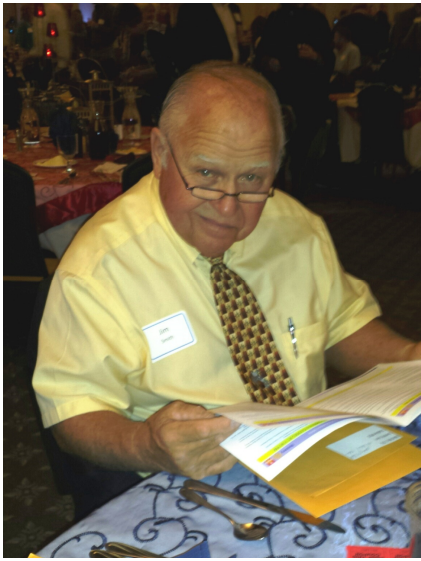

Cody Allen gets us off to a great start. We had 2 hours to socialize, enjoy our included beverages, and make our choices at the Silent Auction tables. After a great dinner prepared by the caterers at St Ambrose University, it was time to enjoy the antics of our Master of Ceremonies, Eric Langan, and the antics of our callers, including Rotarians, Mike Thavenet and John Maxwell. New check in and check out procedures helped the night proceed smoothly. NO SNOW, like last year. A GREAT NIGHT for A GREAT CAUSE.

THIS FRIDAY AT THE STEEPLEGATE

John & Joan Maxwell

John and Joan traveled to South Africa in March of 2016 as part of Iowa Farm Bureau. Their trip focused on agriculture which ranged from alligator farms to zebras on game farms. Come hear their story.

Jim Smith ponders a large purchase to help Rallies for Youth

Carolyn Scheibe continues her fantastic behind the scenes work on the check out tables.

Josh Cobie and Ken Ockerman, work the crowd in the Grab for Grub. You were guaranteed at least a $20 gift card for a donation of $20. How much better could you do?

Please share this Foundation Minute with your club members.
Thank you,

Foundation Minute for Week of November 14

Saginaw Street, paved with 116-year-old bricks and lined with restaurants, runs through the heart of downtown Flint, Mich. Around the corner you'll find a farmers market, a row of museums, a craft brewery, and three campuses: In many ways, Flint fits right in with other quaint and trendy towns in America.

But while parts of the city are experiencing a renaissance, 40 percent of Flint residents live below the poverty line. And although the murder rate dropped nearly in half between 2013 and 2014, there were still 48 homicides in 2015 (in a city of fewer than 100,000 people). Then, two years ago, news broke that lead was leaching into the city's water.

Two pediatricians were instrumental in pushing the city and state governments to admit that the lead problem was real and then in leading the cleanup efforts. One of them is Amy Krug, 2015-16 President of the Rotary Club of Flint. Donations have come from various Rotary clubs including one in Dexter, Michigan, which had its own disaster in 2012 when a tornado ripped through its town and another from Nashville, Tennessee whose club president traveled to Flint to present the funds in person. "Rotary and other local organizations," states Flint Rotarian Jamie Gaskin who heads the United Way of Genesee County, "took donations giving grants to services that will support those in need ensuring accountability."

Gaskin states, "Rotary represents a group of thoughtful folks who already understood water in a lot of different ways." Although until this crisis hit Flint, members of his club had always talked about water issues happening somewhere else, never in their own community. As the data revealed the severity of the problem, Rotarians in churches, civic organizations and professions began to encourage all those institutions to respond.

This is another example how Rotarians once again join together to use their skills and passion to make a difference in their community and the world. We should be proud to be a Rotarian.

How could our club use the expertise and funding that can come through The Rotary Foundation to address issues involving clean, healthy water in our community and elsewhere?
