FRIDAY: At the Steeplegate, with Zoom option

MENTAL HEALTH

'The Gray Matters Collective'

Thanks to Deanna Jensen-Valliere for this week's program. Haley DeGreve is a communications manager for Aftermarket & Customer Support at John Deere and 2020 graduate of Augustana College, where she earned a bachelor's degree in Marketing and Communication Studies. Throughout her education, she was inspired to start a mental health awareness and suicide prevention non-profit called The Gray Matters Collective in 2018. The collective became a movement filled with hope, support, and healing for thousands – becoming a nationally recognized movement through the University of Michigan Depression Center.

Since she began mental health advocacy in 2018, she's spoken at many local schools, events, and workplaces to advocate against mental health stigma and educate crisis intervention. In the past two years alone, she has spoken to over 50,000 people globally on the topic. She also launched a podcast called Surviving the Suck, generating conversations about the reality of mental illness and surviving hardship. This podcast was recently ranked top 10 percent globally on topics related to mental health and suicide.

At John Deere, she helped spearhead the ABLEd Brain Health Subcommittee: a team dedicated to mental health awareness, substance use disorder, and suicide prevention resources. This team has worked to host a variety of lunch n' learns, educational presentations, and provide new documentation for suicide preparedness at John Deere.

Outside of work, she serves as founder and CEO of The Gray Matters Collective and has been trained in Mental Health First Aid USA, the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention, and is a Make It Ok ambassador through Iowa's Healthiest State Initiative. In March 2022, she gave a TEDx talk on Mental Health, Suicide Prevention, and The Power of Community. Most importantly, she continues to fight each day to prevent suicide and hopes to change the world, one person at a time.

Program

Greg Schaapveld, introducing the program, said he's presided four times for Tracy and Tony Knobbe was a presenter three times. Thanks to Jan Touney for notes about Tony's presentation, "Fire and Ice."

By Jan Touney

Tony Knobbe gave fellow North Scott Rotarians a new appreciation of the rich soil we'll be turning over in our gardens and fields this spring with a fascinating lesson on Friday, March 15, of how it all came to be.

In a presentation titled, "Fire and Ice," Tony drew on his ag education at Iowa State University, his farming background and the influence of his father, and his respect for the work of Burlington, Iowa, native and noted conservationist Aldo Leopold.

Tony called his father his first teacher. "He was a philosophical guy and loved to share his wisdom," he said. "I learned a lot about farming and a lot about dirt."

Elected Scott County treasurer in 2022 after serving six years on the county board of supervisors, Tony said he's long been fascinated by the prairie ecosystem and how "we came to be blessed" with the rich soil we have in Scott County.

He elaborated on each of the major factors that led to the formation of Midwestern soil – parent material, glaciers, loess, organic matter, fire and grazing.

The parent materials of any soils, he explained, are sand, silt and clay. The surface area of those particles plays a key factor in the fertility and the workability of the soil. A pound of clay has 1,000 times the surface area of a pound of sand, and it's the surface area where water and nutrients are attached in the soil.

"That's why sandy soils tend to be less fertile and less productive," he said.

In the Midwest, the glaciers were the prime factor that reduced mountains and boulders and other rock to sand, silt and clay. Slowly creeping across the prairie, the glaciers "in many different episodes" and some with ice a mile thick produced many different structures and features on the land.

One doesn't have to drive far from Scott County to find moraines and then even farther north to see other land formations.

The melt of the glaciers in spring and summer produced tremendous movement of water.

Tony Knobbe

"We think we have floods today on the Mississippi," he said. "Imagine ice a mile thick melting within a few weeks and all washing down." Major Midwestern rivers like the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Ohio and the Illinois are where they are because of where a glacier ended.

What that also produced were huge mud flats in the river bottoms. When they dried, the wind picked up the finest of the soil particles and deposited them throughout the Midwest. In western Iowa, he said, the loess can be as deep as 100 feet.

"Here, it's not uncommon to find loess five to six feet deep throughout much of Illinois and eastern Iowa," he said.

Organic matter, as anyone who works the soil knows, provides great advantages. It was long thought, he explained, that organic matter came about largely because of the buffalo "eating, pooping and tramping plant material into the soil." More recently, scientists have said "balderdash" to that and say that organic matter got so deep into the soil from the large root systems of prairie plants such as the compass plant and big bluestem, whose roots can go down 10 to 15 feet.

MARCH 15: TONY KNOBBE, "FIRE AND ICE"

Fire and ice: Iowa's land

Moving to the role of fire, Tony noted that before Native Americans and European settlers arrived on the continent, prairie fires were started by lightning. Native Americans realized that bison loved to find places that had been burned recently because the grass that grows afterward "is very lush and very tender. It's great stuff to eat."

"There are a number of different factors when we think about fire. ... When you think about man that started a fire, maybe it occurs late in the fall, or over a vast area, or a little patch. Maybe it burns fast, or slowly. Every one of those scenarios produces a different effect on the plants that are there."

Grazing is important because it aerates the soil and clears out dead plant litter.

All of the factors have contributed to an incredible diversity of soil that we see. "We farmers know that in one 80-acre field, we might have half a dozen or a dozen different soil types."
