4-23-20 Beth got a hole in one at Legacy hole number 7.

Leray sent me a video with a story. I could not figure out how to share the video. So, I found the story in written form. As always Leray has a good message or a laugh. Here is the story:

Once there was an old man wandering through the woods when he came upon a good old time Baptist Baptism in the lake. "Well" the drunk said to himself I guess to get to the other side of the river I need to talk to the man standing in the river. The drunk man moved closer and the preacher called him in the water "Sir", he said "do you want to see Jesus?" "Sure" answered the drunk still believing this was his only way to the other side. "Praise God" said the preacher and the drunken man entered the lake.

The preacher took and immersed the man into the water. Raising him up he ask the drunk Did you see Jesus?" "Uh no" said the drunk. "That is just fine, we will try again." And the preacher dunked the man again this time holding him a little longer. When raised up the preacher ask again "Did you see Jesus?" no sir I still did not." replied the drunk. "That is alright we can try once again" And so the preacher dunked the man one more time, this time holding him down until he bubbled. "Did you see Jesus, son" ask the preacher. The drunk man gasping for breath this time reply's, "No, but let me ask you something, are you sure this is where he fell in at?"

I saw this on Danny's Facebook page and wanted to share it

Very sorry to hear you have a member of your family struggling. Hope they are getting better!

Danny Mielneczek: I have a family member (a young one at that) in serious condition that might disagree with the 'nonsense' component of your argument. The virus mimicked her nervous system and shut things down. Lost control of lower body and underwent a spinal tap. For me - I'd rather do things that I feel are silly and nonsensical if it means the people I love will still be with me when it's safe.

See you Friday May 1st. Please send me any updates, jokes pictures to share.
