PROGRAM - Challenges, Disappointments & Lessons Learned

Scott Podsednik

Scott Podsednik grew up in the town of West, Texas with dreams of playing professional baseball. In 1994, he was signed by the Texas Rangers and began playing minor league ball immediately after he graduated from high school.

Scott made his major league debut playing with the Seattle Mariners in 2001. The Milwaukee Brewers acquired Scott in 2003 and he went on to win nearly every rookie of the year award available during that season. In 2004, he led the league with 70 stolen bases and earned the honor of being selected to his first All-Star game in 2005. However, the highlight of his career occurred when Scott helped lead the Chicago White Sox to their 2005 World Series Championship by hitting a Game Two walk-off home run – only the 14th in World Series history.

Scott's path to greatness in the world of Major League Baseball was not easy however. He languished in the minor leagues for many years, frustrated by his inability to fully tap his potential as a player. How he transitioned to the pinnacle of success as a professional baseball player is an inspiring story of grit, determination, resilience and absolute focus.

Scott is now retired from Major League Baseball and lives in Dallas. He is here today to talk to us about the challenges and disappointments he experienced early in his career and the lessons he learned about what it takes to succeed at the highest level.
