Celebrating 10 Years of Battle of the Badges!

Police and Fire Hockey players gathered in the Good vs. Good CHaD hockey Classic March 19 at SNHU Areana. Dartmouth-Hitchcock and CHaD celebrated ten years of the CHaD Battle of the Badges Hockey Championship. Teams of police officers and firefighters from across New England faced-off to celebrate ten years of skating, scoring, and raising money for the patients, families, and services provided by the CHaD.

A still-rising total of $255,855 was raised this year, bringing the 10-year total to $1.93 million for Children's Hospital at Dartmouth-Hitchcock. "Our goal next year is to reach the two million mark," suggested one CHaD family.

Since its debut in 2008, thanks to the creative inspiration of WMUR TV's Jamie Staton, the Battle of the Badges Hockey Championship has generated nearly $1.7 million through corporate partners, ticket sales, donations, and player fundraising. Each year, the players undertake the task of raising at least $1,500 each in order to play in the game. Last year's players combined to generate over $135,000 for the cause, averaging more than $3,000 per player.

Retired Manchester police lieutenant and Team Police coach Pete Favreau and Dover Fire and Rescue deputy chief Micky Drouin of Team Fire were back to lead their respective teams. Favreau was assisted by retired Kensington police chief Wayne Sheehan and New Hampshire State Police detective Steve Sloper. Former Team Fire player and Portsmouth Firefighter John Sylvester joined Drouin in leading the firefighters.

The rosters feature a mix of returning players and CHaD hockey rookies to mark the decade-long series. Highlighting Team Police's roster is Dover's Chris Plummer, Continued to Page 15
