Would you like a Coke, a soda, a sodee, a pop, or a tonic?

Rick introduced his guests Prof. Kristine Hildebrandt and graduate student, Laura Wehimer who, along with Larry LaFond, are working on a project researching dialectical variation in Illinois.

The presenters shared their research on the variations that can be found in the combinations of words, pronunciation, and grammar that can be identified in the different regions of Illinois. They have determined that there are some distinctive dialects that can be identified depending on which region a person has grown up in. As linguists, their interest is in identifying ways in which language is used by specific people groups.

Several examples were offered based on then way sentences are constructed, specific verbage used, or ways that words are pronounced from one region to another. Experts can determine the area that a person was raised in by just listening to the way that person uses words.

In order to develop a comprehensive dialect map of Illinois, more data is needed. Any individual can participate in the project by going to the website illiniosdialects.com. Giving 20 minutes of your time to have your speech recorded will be rewarded by $5 or a gallon of gas ;-).
