TODAY'S PROGRAM

Program Chair of the Day: Jim Evans

Tim Millis NFL Referees Association

Business:

Mr. Millis was a special agent for the Criminal Division of the Internal Revenue Service for seventeen years. Since 1983 he has been self-employed assisting attorneys in civil and criminal financial litigation.

He has been the coordinator of Big XII football officials for ten years. He has been the Executive Director of the National Football League Referees Association since 2006.

Sports:

Mr. Millis was in the Sports Hall of Fame from Copiah Lincoln Junior College and Millsaps College. He was an NFL on field official for thirteen seasons, including thirteen playoff games which included three Championship games and two Super Bowl games.

He is a past recipient of the Officiating Award from the National Football Foundation and College Hall of Fame.

Excerpted from an article in USA Today, September 19, 2012:

You can't just memorize the rulebook, put on a striped shirt, toot your whistle and apply for an NFL officiating job. Where does it start?

"Probably on a junior high or pee-wee football field," said former NFL official Tim Millis, executive director of the NFL Referees Association.

After his linebacker-fullback days at Millsaps College, Millis said, the first game he officiated probably was a junior high spring game. He said NFL officials typically spent five to ten years at high schools and five to ten years at colleges, with about five of those at the top level.

When he started officiating in the NFL in 1989, Millis said, newcomers usually were in their early to mid-40s. Because of the availability of clinics and training, it skews a bit younger now, he said, adding that some new officials are in their mid-30s if they're on a fast pace.

Officials might get hooked via officiating classes that are part of physical education curricula in colleges. "A college kid can go out and work a couple of junior high games and pick up $30 to $50," Millis said. If they like it, they're good at it and their post-graduate job allows, they might move into the high schools. "After that, you've not only got to be good, you've got to be a little lucky to be in the right place at the right time. Somebody looks at you and wants you to work maybe a junior college scrimmage. And it just goes on," he said. The entire article can be found at www.usatoday.com/story/sports/nfl/2012/09/20/nfl-referee-career-replacement-officials/1581299/

COMMITTEE TIME

Report from Grace Guthrie, Youth Exchange Student in Mumbai:

I have had the time of my life in these past several months. When I say "time of my life", I don't mean it in the usual sense when the phrase entails nothing but amusement and happiness. I mean that these months have held experiences unlike any I have experienced or will experience in my life; both those of wonder and those of confusion and shock.

In my stay here, I have experienced six Hindu and Jain festivals: Raksha Bandhan, Krishna Janmashtmi, Paryushan, Ganesh Chaturthi, Navratri, and Diwali. Each festival is so unique and packed with tradition! I have also experienced my fair share of culture shock and homesickness. But through it all, I feel so blessed to have been given this opportunity to see a new culture.

Thank you, Park Cities Rotary Club!
Grace

good season that ended suddenly. He noted that the team had made the post-season play-offs for three years in a row, and were in the World Series for two years in a row. He also noted that these winning seasons had brought more spectators to the game. The team is moving to the American League West, which has some very good teams in it. He said pitching is the hallmark of the Rangers' division. They are bringing in good replacements for the players who have left. He said the goal of the team is to win, but also to build.

Tom Grieve then introduced Joe Nathan, and asked him why he had come to the Rangers. He said that despite his concern about the hot summers, he believed the team was strong enough to win. He said that when the season started to lose late in the season, it was hard to start winning again; he thought that they might have been trying too hard. He said that offensively, the team is great, and that the defense has improved to the point that pitchers can pitch as they want.

Tom Grieve then introduced Ron Washington. He was asked about the expectations for the team. He responded that from a managers perspective the team had met expectations. He said that they work well together and never make excuses or point fingers. He said that he expects that the new players coming in will fit well with the group and fill in some gaps.
