WHAT'S OLD IS NEW AGAIN (AND WE'RE NOT TALKING FASHION)

Electric vehicles were once more common than internal combustion cars - and if trends continue, they soon will be again. But let's look at what that means, good and bad, using our out-of-warranty crystal ball.

I am a retired mechanical engineer who spent his career in the power industry, part of it in large coal-fired power plants and part with gas turbines. For the last six years I've had a solar array on our roof that provides all the electricity we need for our house and our two electric vehicles.

ROTARIAN

LYLE BRADY

I was born into an Ohio community of 630 people, where I remained for 3 years until my parents moved to Washington state. There, I grew up through grade, junior high, high school and junior college.

My junior college years were interrupted in 1953 when I was drafted into the army.

During high school and prior to my military service I found a wonderful roller skating partner and we dance skated competitively for 3 years. The final year, we won the State and Regional Championships, and placed 9th in the Nationals.

We married after leaving military service and I continued pursuing my Electrical Engineering degree by attending night school at Seattle University while working at Boeing.

After 9 years at Boeing, my wife and I moved, with 4 children, to the LA area. There I had 4 different employers, one was Areojet Electro Systems, where I was program manager of USAF satellite subsystems.

My final employment was at BHK, Inc., where I remained Director of Engineering until my retirement 2 years ago.
