LAST WEEK'S PROGRAM

Aaron Hoover, MD, a distinguished dermatologist with a delightful sense of humor, who practices here in Northern Colorado, gave a thorough presentation on the top 12 skin problems, most of them benign but some of them cancerous. He prefaced his remarks with the disclaimer that his remarks were not meant as medical advice for anyone or to replace the need for a good skin exam (recommended yearly) but simply as a means of educating us about skin conditions that can occur as we get older. With this knowledge, we can all have a better dialogue with our physicians about such.
Highlights included the following:

- There is a hereditary predisposition to skin tags (aka acrochordons).
- Age spots (aka lentiginos) are actually prevalent in more than 90% of fair-skinned adults over 60.
- The most common skin cancer is not melanoma but rather basal cell carcinoma, which commonly occurs in people over 40, is usually located around the nose, and may look like eczema, psoriasis, or some other rash.
- Melanoma risk factors include the following: sun exposure (intermittent and childhood), fair skin, blue eyes, blond or red hair, and family history.
