PROGRAM

Retired Lt. Col. Joe Bowden’s talk, titled “A Night Sky,” included these highlights:

- Every star you see is at least as big and bright as our sun.
- Though our sun is bigger than about 90% of stars in our sky, it’s still called a yellow dwarf; there are lots of smaller stars we can’t see.
- The bigger the star, the shorter its lifespan; red stars are the coolest, while blue stars are the hottest.
- The easiest constellation to find is the Big Dipper, which also points to Polaris, aka the North Star.
- The closest star (triple star) to us is Alpha Centauri.
- The light from Andromeda Galaxy (the farthest thing in the sky visible with the naked eye), visible in the fall, takes 2.5 million years to reach us!
