PROGRAM

In her “Updates on Loveland Open Lands & Trails” Michele Van Hare, Loveland Environmental Coordinator, explained how this city division continues to accomplish the following:

- improvements to local conservation and connectivity through trail access
- preservation of important wildlife habitat and natural resources for the enjoyment of our community
- places for people to exercise, engage, learn, experience nature, and take a COVID pandemic break

Our 2020-2021 pandemic years have reinforced the importance of outdoor spaces, opportunities, and trails in Loveland. Our open lands and trails have experienced record visitation, opened new areas for public access at Prairie Ridge and Boedecker Bluff, and built 4.2 miles of new soft-surface trails. We’ve continued restoration efforts along the Big Thompson River and elsewhere, planned two new regional trail connections, and completed a number of repair and improvement projects. COVID-19 forced our staff and volunteers to find innovative ways to offer smaller, online and self-guided nature-based programs for all ages and a variety of interests.

Writer and naturalist Henry David Thoreau, who is best known for his book "Walden," reminds us that we alone decide what fulfills us and brings us joy, and often those joys are much easier to reach than we think.
