Vocational Training Teams aid Adopt-a-Village Project in Uganda

Dan Nixon

Rotary International News -- June 2012

An Adopt-a-Village project being carried out by Rotarians in Uganda and California, is helping to improve life significantly for people in Nkondo, Uganda. The project involves four of Rotary's areas of focus: water and sanitation, basic education and literacy, disease prevention and treatment, and economic and community development.

An important catalyst to the effort's success is the vocational training team (VTT), a group of professionals that travels either to learn more about their vocation or to teach local professionals about a particular field. "The main role has been to help kick-start the project," says Past District Governor Philippe Lamoise, who led a team from District 5340 to District 9200 in Uganda in late 2010 and early 2011. "The training I conducted was about business strategies, savings, and investments as they apply to family-size farming businesses."

Funded by a Rotary Foundation global grant, the team of four Rotarians and three other professionals also helped lay the groundwork for a clean water system, trained health clinic staff, and renovated a computer room at a school.

The VTT also paved the way for partnerships with one local nongovernmental organization (NGO) to train community residents in microfinance and with another to manage the microcredit effort, with oversight by the Rotary Club of Kampala North. In addition, the VTT inspired a partnership with an NGO to train farmers to produce crops with high market values.

Lamoise was part of the GSE District 5340 team that originally traveled to the region in 2001. It established contacts and was of great benefit to District 5340. But Lamoise feels that from the point of view of the host community, the VTT program is of much more value. The VTT program produced tangible useful work, rather than "just learning about the culture and establishing connections."
