Russ Kyncl spoke on the Visions to Do Good, Ben Franklin's Perspective.. Ben Franklin was raised a Puritan in Boston. He only had two years of formal education.

Cotton Mather, an early distinguished citizen of Boston, wrote a book titled "Essays To Do Good." This book came into Ben's possession at an early age and had apparently an effect on Ben. Cotton's son Samuel was involved in the Salem witch trials which kind of tarnished the Mather name.

Ben sent Samuel a letter which quoted some of the material in Cotton's book to help Samuel. Quoting from the letter, Ben stated "[the book] gave me such a turn of thinking, as to have an influence on my conduct through life; for I have always set a greater value on the character of a doer of good, than any other kind of reputation; and if I have been, as you seem to think, a useful citizen, the public overs the advantage of it to that book."

In a codicil to his will, Ben stated, "I devote two thousand pounds sterling ($3,746.000 USD in 2013), of which I give one thousand thereof to the inhabitants of the town of Boston, in Massachusetts, and the other thousand to the inhabitants of the city of Philadelphia, in trust, to and for the uses, intents, and purposes herein after mention and declared."

In Boston, this grant created the Benjamin Franklin Institute of Technology which offers training in the trades. This institute is still operating and providing opportunities for youth.

The money for Philadelphia created a scholarship fund managed by the Philadelphia Foundation, which since 1993 has provided nearly 700 scholarships for young men and women to attain technical degrees.

The club's newest member, Mike Dworak, was inducted. From the bulletin, this is some information about Mike. He is from Nebraska but lived all over the US and overseas. His world has been marketing, media, and development, and basically influential communication through story-telling. He had been married for 46 years. He has three children and two grandchildren.
