ROTARY/FOUNDATION INTERNATIONAL MINUTE

Rotarians understand that the whole world is their backyard! They can see the effects of climate change in communities they care about — and are tackling the problem the way they always do: coming up with projects, using connections to change policy — and planning for the future.

We continue looking at “Drawdown: The Most Comprehensive Plan Ever Proposed to Reverse Global Warming,” which ranked solutions from 1 to 80 based on their potential to avert or reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Regenerative agriculture practices include avoiding the use of plows to keep from disturbing the soil; planting a diverse array of cover crops; and limiting or abstaining from pesticides and synthetic fertilizers. These methods boost the amount of organic matter — carbon — in the soil, improving its health and that of the plants growing in it.

By reducing the need for fertilizer, regenerative agriculture can help cut carbon in the atmosphere while increasing farmers’ production.

Forty people from Meihua village, Taiwan, were trained in organic farming techniques through a global grant project of the Rotary clubs of Taipei Lungmen, Taiwan, and Patumwan, Thailand.

The effort, carried out in partnership with the Organic Farming Association of Taiwan, included creating a training facility and providing internships at organic farms. Organizers expected that growing without pesticides would lower farming costs and that selling organic vegetables at a premium price would improve villagers’ earnings.
