WPRC MISSION STATEMENT

Serving and enriching our community through leadership and learning

Craft Fair: only 13 booths to sell. We're almost there.

China Lights: Please, sign up for you work slots. Bring a spouse or friend to keep you company and to help, too.

September 21 meeting: great occasion to bring a guest. Speaker will be Milwaukee Bucks Vice President of Operations, Dave Dean.

Poliomyelitis ("polio" for short) has been a cause of life-threatening paralysis for thousands of years. At the height of the biggest outbreak in 1952, almost 60,000 cases with more than 3,000 deaths were reported in the US alone. Thanks to immunizations and access to clean water, wards filled with children kept alive in iron lungs are a distant memory. For years, polio has teetered close to global eradication. Now a combination of old and new challenges -- conflict, vaccine hesitancy and Covid-19 -- are frustrating a decades-long effort to stop its international spread. The disclosure of a case in New York in July is a reminder that failure to vanquish polio from its last remaining strongholds could result in a resurgence of the crippling disease.

Polio's a highly infectious disease caused by a virus that replicate in the human gastrointestinal tract. Infectious viral particles are shed in fecal matter, which can infect other people if they are transferred to the mouth via unwashed hands or ingested in contaminated food and drinks. Virus particles can survive in soil and water for months. Once inside the body, the virus can invade the nervous system and cause paralysis in a matter of hours. Only 1-in-200 leading to irreversible paralysis, usually in the legs. Among those paralyzed, 5% to 10% die. In the long term, 25% to 40% of children who recover from paralytic polio get post-polio syndrome, a group of potentially disabling symptoms that appear some 15 to 40 years after a patient's recovery.
