WPRC MISSION STATEMENT

Serving and enriching our community through leadership and learning

Family of Rotary event: Milwaukee Milkmen game and picnic on July 1 or July 15? Let Rob Petri know which date(s) work for you and how many will be in your party. (Rob Petri petri.rjma@gmail.com 262-744-0900)

Community health workers are usually women. They have expansive personal networks that enable them to identify and connect with underserved people living around them. They often go from house to house, providing basic medical interventions and advice. In many countries, they're the main workforce administering polio vaccinations.

Frontline workers go from house to house to vaccinate, take the message of the importance of polio vaccination — and not just polio vaccination, but also the health and well-being of children and mothers — to the community. They are paid around US$150 per month.

Administering vaccines and educating people about the need for them are among the most important parts of a community health worker's job.

"They will do some basic checks, prenatally, and often accompany women to the hospital when it's time to give birth. Then, they'll follow up after the baby is born to encourage the mother to get the baby vaccinated," says Closser, who has studied community health workers in Ethiopia, India, Nepal, Pakistan, and other countries.
