Life in Port Gregory

Glenys McDonald was our guest speaker on Wednesday evening and once again she held the members spellbound with an account of a complex operation carried out by Customs officials and the AFP in the laid back resort and fishing town of Port Gregory.

Glenys and her husband Vic moved to Port Gregory in 1989. They managed the caravan park and the general store for several years. Their quiet, laid back, life was interrupted in 1992 by a visit by three federal agents needing accommodation. The three "fishermen" were attempting to obtain more information about the activities of a person seen in the region with a twin engine Beechcraft without seats and a suitcase containing a large sum of cash. The subject under observation (target ) then arrived in Port Gregory and made several phone calls from the telephone booth, rented a house in Port Gregory and borrowed a dinghy from Glenys and Vic. "Target" then asked for tide tables and local maps. The AFP were aware of a yacht headed for Port Gregory that was suspected to be carrying cargo for "Target". As the yacht got closer the number of AFP agents increased. The yacht arrived one night at midnight and Glenys' dinghy was used by "Target" and Co. to offload the cargo. The weight of the cargo capsized the dinghy dropping 1/2 ton of cannabis resin into the ocean and ruining the outboard motor. A rubber duck vessel was taken off the yacht to complete the transfer of drugs.

The offloaded cargo was placed in the rented house and the smugglers enjoyed a celebratory drink while the AFP inspected the premises to confirm the contents before arresting the perpetrators.

The yacht and crew, including brother of "Target" were arrested by AFP agents who pursued them in a crayboat.

The significance of the operation and the nature of the contraband was made known to Glenys after the arrests.

Three tons of cannabis resin worth $42 million and firearms were found by the AFP.

10 September 1992

- A yacht, Santa Barbara, sailed from the Cocos Islands and moored off the coast of Port Gregory, about 600km north of Perth, WA. Cannabis weighing 3 tonnes and with a street value of $42 million, was being moved by dinghy to the shore when AFP officers moved in. Five people were arrested. The yacht was seized, along with an AK47 firearm, a pistol and a light aircraft.

The cannabis resin that had fallen into the water was not retrieved by the AFP. Several locals were seen searching for booty at well known "wash up" points along the coast.

When the news of the arrests was publicized the media quickly descended on Port Gregory and Glenys was photographed by the press before she could get properly made up. An enthralling tale—thanks Glenys.
