What is Truth?

Truth doesn't have a definite definition, it has so many meanings. How we as people determine the truth is by taking beliefs and background knowledge to determine what the truth is. Truth can affect daily life and your point of view of different things in life. Truth can also be a confusing concept because like I said earlier there is no definite definition. It is a word used in so many different contexts and situations that there is no way to define it. The google definition of truth is the quality or state of being true. That is a good definition for truth but only in some situations in other situations it could have a totally different meaning.

In my opinion I think that truth is more important than fairness. The definition of fairness is impartial and just treatment or behavior without favoritism or discrimination. Truth is a concept that can take you further in life than fairness can. Fairness isn't a daily part of life but truth is whether you notice it or not.

In my opinion truth can be used to build better relationships by being honest. That is not always the situation. Truth is confusing to most people because of all the contexts it is used in. It is pretty hard to determine how truth could build better relationships in every situation. The main part about it is just being honest. Truth is always matched up with being honest most of the time so that is a common one. A truth could also be a belief, or a god you look up to. It all depends on how you view life and how you view truth as. Some people believe truth has value other people don't believe truth has any value whatsoever. Other people think truth has value but only in certain situations.

In my opinion truth is not beneficial to everyone like is said earlier some people think truth has value some don't some think truth has value but only in certain situations. If you asked people the definition of truth they would most likely just say honesty, or being true to yourself and others. Both of those definitions have very different meanings in the long run. Basically how you view truth is based on how you view life. It isn't any more complicated than that. Truth is complex to some people. Truth could mean everything to a person or it could mean absolutely nothing. You can't tell someone how to see the truth as or even what it is. If you asked a child then an adult the meaning of truth that's two completely different answers because the child doesn't know how they view their life and the adult does because they have had more time to grow and experience things unlike the child.

In conclusion, truth is only what you make of it. People rely on beliefs, gods, and background knowledge to determine the meaning of truth. Truth can be simple or complex depending on how you view life. Some people believe that they have a truth.
