It is not to be expected, of course, that these ratings should in every case be in perfect accord with actual conditions. It must be remembered that the agency has no means of compelling the dealer to give out information about himself or about his business. If he is unwilling to furnish such information, the agency is compelled to gather it from other sources as best it may. Moreover, inasmuch as about three thousand changes occur daily in the credit ratings of the country, it is readily seen that the rating book must contain a large number of errors even on the very day of its pub-
