This meeting's program was the Community Opus Project. It is an arts initiative co-sponsored by the Chula Vista Elementary School District, the City of Chula Vista and the San Diego Youth Symphony. Its purpose is to provide musical education to young people with the hopes of recruiting them for future involvement in music as adults. The project is in 50 of our elementary schools and has over 350 participants. They meet at five of the schools for practice. The San Diego Youth Symphony also sponsors a Conservatory that involves over 600 students from the county. They practice at Balboa Park each weekend. Many students are in both.

It is a proven fact that students who study music also perform well in their academic subjects. Former Mayor Cheryl Cox provided some additional information on how that process has enhanced the lives of hundreds, if not thousands of students. Five years ago, there was not a major presence for arts education in the schools, now most if the schools have accredited teachers working to help students achieve. The school district has been recognized nationally for these programs

We had a string choir perform from the Conservatory and a group of the elementary students from the school district. See the pictures on page three.
