Mountain Ghost

The Ghost was excited..... having been alerted to the sighting of a strange creature in Wentworth Falls Lake.

Had the Loch Ness Monster breast-stroked or dog paddled all the way out to Wentworth Falls from Scotland?

WENTWORTH FALLS LAKE

Recently the Mountain Ghost had been alerted to the sighting of a strange creature in Wentworth Falls Lake. According to the locals it only appeared early in the morning, would disappear, then reappear then disappear again.

The Ghost was excited! Had the Loch Ness Monster breaststroked or dog paddled all the way out to Wentworth Falls from Scotland?

The Ghost set off early one morning about 6.00am. It really is a lovely lake at that time of the day. He did see a log with three ducks on it.

They would dive into the water and then climb back onto the log again and so on.

Mystery solved and a couple of referrals to SpecSavers at Katoomba. The Ghost was surprised at how many people were walking or jogging at that time of the day. The lake provides a lot of enjoyment to many people apart from tourists.

As usual the Mountain Ghost likes to give his thousands of readers a bit of history. He was amazed to find it got its name because it was at Wentworth Falls.

Who would have thought that. A concrete wall was built across Jamison Creek in 1878 to form the lake as a water supply for steam trains well before the Blue Mountains Railway was electrified. The current dam was built in 1908 and enlarged in 1910 and 1914.

A threat to the health of the lake is the Redfin Perch, a noxious fish species. The Perch is native to northern Europe and was introduced to Australia in the 1860s for angling. It is a serious pest destroying native fish and insects. The lake was stocked with brown and rainbow trout.

Wentworth Falls Lake with its area of Blue Mountains Hanging Swamp is of significant importance as the habitat of a threatened species, the Blue Mountains Water Skink. I bet you didn't know that.

Hanging Swamps are also endangered. These are swamps that are formed by groundwater seeping through sandstone layers and are usually found on the side of valleys. The Ghost was surprised to learn the lake is 6m deep in spots. It looks very shallow. The Ghost also liked the 16 sandstone sculptures dotted around the park. They depict native seed pods found in the area. Each work is placed next to the appropriate plant with engraved information about the plant and scientific name.

While the Ghost was doing his walk around the lake he came across a plaque proposing naming the walk the Stanley Bignell Walkway. Who was Stanley Bignell?

According to the Blue Mountains City Council, Stanley was a former RAAF pilot and Prisoner of War who moved to Hazelbrook in 1956.

Stanley worked as a teacher at Katoomba High School. He taught boat building and founded the Blue Mountains Sailing Club at Wentworth Falls Lake providing opportunities for teenagers to participate in this sport. This included construction, sailing and water safety.

He also worked with Council to have the Lake developed as a recreational lake for everyone's use. He also founded the Hazelbrook Soccer and Netball Clubs in the 1950s at Gloria Park as well as the construction of courts and gardens.

He died prematurely in 1978 as a result of his injuries in WWII. The Ghost thinks the Council have made a good decision naming the walk after Stanley Bignell.

If you want to walk all the way around the lake it is 3.5km and should take two hours. If the Ghost thought it was fairly easy then it must have been very easy, but again the Ghost was carrying his esky. If you have not seen the new building and boardwalk it is worth taking a look.
