Last week's speaker Ross Buckley

INDUSTRY	OLD WORLD	NEW WORLD
Government	Governments provide services solely to citizens within their geographic boundaries	Governments potentially compete for global citizens through the provision of e-currency (e.g. Estonia)
Gaming	Big or small, it's the screen that rules as the interface to online experience	The online world merges with our physical environment as mixed reality revolutionises game fact, and then education, medicine (e.g. Magic Leap)
Fashion Retail	Big bets on fickle trends as 80% of retail inventory committed at fashion season start	Supply chain flexibility and cutting edge inventory management shortens supply chain to 2 weeks; catwalk to shop floor (e.g. Zara)
Pharmacy	One-size-fits-all pill taken with results assessed at the patient's next clinical visit	Ingestible sensors track dosage and vital signs in response as medicines are consumed to provide real-time data to physicians & patients (e.g. Proteus)
Investment	Capital markets used to raise funds	Funding from the crowd accelerates the process. Example: App-only bank Monzo raised £1 million on Crowdfunder in just 96 seconds

Ross Buckley with a rapid fire talk and slide presentation gave us a very good appreciation of economics and data today and in the future. KPMG really stands for 'keep playing more golf'. He said there had been a great destruction in trust over the years. Google was trusted more than most experts. Over the last few years there had been great volatility – jet fuel ranging from $3-$11. New Zealand is part of the Asia-Pacific region which already has a significant population and rising rapidly. New Zealand figures for over 65-year-old are now 3%, 2020 13%, 2030 34% with 5.5% over the age of 85 by 2051. You can now do business in Estonia while living in New Zealand. It used to take six months to get from design to shop now Zara is doing it in two weeks and if it doesn't sell replace it. The big firms in 2001 like General Electric have now been replaced in 2016 by Amazon, Google, Apple... In New Zealand we now have Zero and Push Pay (1.2billion).

A future of work report replaces what was needed in 2015 with what will be needed in 2020. Replacing quality control and active listening with emotional intelligence and cognitive flexibility and moving critical thinking and creativity to near the top of requirements.

Dollar shave club.com showed a video of a young guy who started with $5000 and took on the big boys whose business is now worth $160 million. He met a robot who can work 22 hours a day (two hours for recharging). A significant part of today's management is managing the impact of job cuts. Block chain is now a very important part of the business linking the manufacturer, transporter, wholesaler and seller together. He mentioned the four Qs – digital quotient, intelligence quotient, cultural quotient and emotional quotient. He finished with 10 questions to consider.

Dear Rotarian

Have you been thinking about attending this year's District Conference but left it to the last minute?

Don't worry as you can still register and there is still some accommodation left in Kerikeri.

This year's conference has a reduced rate for partners who will attend the conference dinner but not the full conference.

We've got a great lineup of speakers organised and would love to have as many of you as possible there. We would encourage you to go ahead and register this week at <http://www.rotaryconference9910.org.nz>

Parting Thoughts

Retirement is an opportunity to enjoy life in a new way; the right to stop work and do the 1,001 things you've always wanted to do but never had the time for.

It is a chance to give yourself over to new challenges and adventures, stay young at heart, kind in spirit and be in a place where earning money doesn't dictate all your choices.

The past cannot be changed but look to the future it can be changed.
