

An Eco Minute: Why Rotarians Care About Climate Change

Why should Rotarians care about climate change?. According to climate scientist Katharine Hayhoe, because climate action passes the Four-Way Test.

She once gave a presentation to a Rotary Club in Texas. On her way into the meeting she saw a poster outlining the Four-Way Test. “That’s climate change and climate action,” she thought. Climate change is the truth based on decades of scientific evidence. Taking action to slow climate change is fair, because climate change often unfairly disadvantages the poor and marginalized. Many climate solutions help to build goodwill and better friendships as well as healing the planet. And of course, fighting climate change is beneficial to everyone everywhere.

Climate action is a natural for all Rotarians! Let’s work together to make a difference.
