Daughter of educators named Teacher of the Month

“Teaching is not easy, but rewarding work like this never is,” says the latest Teacher of the Month honoree, Heather Steiner. Mrs. Steiner, whose parents were both educators, is a 22-year educator who currently teaches seventh- and eighth-grade computer and business and serves as technology coach at Schoo Middle School. She was honored at a recent luncheon by the award’s co-sponsors, Lincoln East Rotary Club and U.S. Bank. Born and raised in Tecumseh, Nebraska, she is a graduate of Tecumseh High School (1989) who earned her undergrad/teaching degree from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln in December 1994. She went on to earn a master’s degree in curriculum and instruction with an emphasis on technology in the classroom from Peru State College in 2007, and an administration certificate from Concordia College in 2012. She taught at Dawes Middle School from 1995 to 2009, and has taught at Schoo Middle School the past eight years. During the past three years she has taken on the role of Instructional Technology Coach, working with teachers on how to add technology into their current curriculum. She and her husband Doug, who works at Zoetis as a scheduler in the maintenance department, have three children: Amanda, 19, a sophomore at Doane University; Emily, 15, a sophomore at Malcolm High School; and Isabel, 10, a 4th-grader at Malcolm Elementary School. “I knew I wanted to be a teacher back when I was 10 years old. I used to play school with my dolls and use old worksheets my mother brought home from her first-grade classroom. I have a picture of me playing school when I was younger that is at my desk to greet me every morning,” she said.
