

Preparing Your Club To Grow

One of the challenges of club membership growth is our old fashion ways of integrating new members into our clubs. Many of our clubs have been using the same methods and procedures for too many years. If our clubs are going to sustain growth we need to identify the reasons the “New Generation” joins Rotary. Usually our clubs try to mold new members into what we expect them to be. The “New Generation” is looking to make a difference (not be molded). They are looking for self-satisfaction and the ability to use their knowledge and skills to enhance your club. So how are you going to give them the opportunity? Here are a few thoughts that may help you prepare your club for growth.

Do your members look forward to your next Rotary meeting? Are most of your guests joining your club? If you answer to either question is “no”, it’s time to find out why.

Every club gains new members now and then. But do those members stay? If not, why not? If new members generally don’t stay with a club, the club is not meeting their needs. For sustained membership growth, make your club worth belonging to! Start by evaluating your club by using the following questions. After the inventory is completed you have a benchmark – a starting point for club improvement in every factor needed to sustain growth.
