What do we do at a meeting?

Most New Zealand meetings are for 2-7 days. Each day is free to be enjoyed individually but there is an outline programme, which is not mandatory but which provides the foundation for fellowship.

The meeting will often include optional in-van hospitality, which widens the opportunity for developing friendship, particularly for the newer members.

One or two of the evenings may be free to allow for your own arrangements. Occasionally evening meals are shared as a group. In the finer weather, barbecues are very often the order of the day.

Our AGM is in November, and the bush camp in February is a highlight.
