Reasons to give beyond possible tax advantage
- Donors can enjoy the satisfaction of helping someone make a positive, sustainable change to an individual’s ability to support themselves and their dependents.
- By enabling financial independence through vocational education, the donor will have helped increase future tax revenue for the State of Arizona and helped to cause economic growth from the grant recipient’s increased discretionary spending in the future.
- Some potential donors may have experienced hard times themselves in the past and received help from others. Giving to TRVFA is an excellent vehicle for “paying it forward.”
- Businesses may want to give in their own self-interest to participate in workforce development. Others, like banks, may want to give because they have community reinvestment requirements they are obligated by regulation to fulfill.

Planned Giving
Leaving a legacy to sustain support for vocational education into the future can be accomplished by simply adding a simple bequest in a will or adding TRVFA as a beneficiary of a life insurance policy. There are other more complex vehicles that can be advantageous such as charitable remainder trusts. Donors interested in options of this nature should consult with their financial advisor or estate planning attorney.
